

European correspondents meet to discuss common issues facing church and school

Tania ap Sion

At the end of April national correspondents from 16 European countries met together at a chateau in Klingenthal, Alsace, to discuss areas of current interest and concern for church/school relationships in their countries. The Consultation was called by the Inter-European Commission on Church and School (ICCS) with the aim of identifying issues and challenges for ICCS to work on during the next period of its activity.

Dr Tania ap Sion, Director of the St Mary's Centre, participated in the event as Correspondent for Wales and Secretary to ICCS.

The preliminary report from the meeting may be downloaded from the ICCS website:

The Inter-European Commission on Church and School (ICCS) is active in the field of church and school and focuses on topics such as religious education, multicultural and multi-religious learning, norms and values education, ecumenical learning, education in Europe and the position of religion in the European education policy. Since 1986 ICCS, as a Non-Governmental Organisation (NGO), has had consultative status at the Council of Europe, and participates in the education group of the NGO Liaison Committee of the Council.
